Momentum of a stationary particle wave Physics Forums
Physicswise this means to get an approximately stationary state for a free particle the standard deviation of momentum should be very small, implying through Heisenberg's uncertainty relation that the standard deviation of position must be very wide.

Stationary states and time dependent states
The Hamiltonian H of a stationary-state system contains no time-dependent terms. So the result of calculating the energy of such a system is the same whether or not the time factoris included. (Show that the same is true in the calculation of (and of also.)
